

Writers, Editors, Photographers, Radio Producers

“The time has come for us to reimagine everything. We have to reimagine work and go away from labor. We have to reimagine revolution and get beyond protest. We have to think not only about change in our institutions, but changes in ourselves.... It’s up to us to reimagine the alternatives.”

— Grace Lee Boggs

Seeking movement-based media makers: Paid and volunteer positions available

Reimagine! publishes a digital edition of Race, Poverty & the Environment (RP&E) each month, podcasts every other month, and a print journal twice a year. Founded 25 years ago as the voice of the environmental justice movement, RP&E continues to focus a race, class and gender lens on core issues of justice and survival. Reimagine! aims to organically link activists and media-makers to amplify our voices, strengthen our connections and deepen our cross-movement analysis.

Participants can engage on different levels. They can:

- After receiving an assignment, produce an article, photo essay or podcast in response to RP&E’s current call for submissions. (See other side of this sheet.)
- Engage in monthly editorial conversations—suggest topics, help make decisions and shape analysis.

Applicants for Reimagine! positions must be:

- connected to low-income people and communities of color
- capable of using a race, class, environmental and gender lens to analyze key issues
- able to supply relevant publication credits or have previous writing/production experience
- familiar with the dynamics, key issues and strategic choices facing justice movements in the U.S.

To see the submission guidelines, current digital editions and archived contents of Race, Poverty & the Environment, go to www.reimaginerpe.org.

More info at reimaginerpe.org/jobs

